

The honour which every explorer covets and which geographers would most surely have conferred on him had he survived never was his. But his name is secure in the heart of every traveller, and those whose praise he would most have prized will always do reverence to him.