Dr. A. B. RENDLE, F.R.S., Keeper of Botany, British Museum, to whom specimens from these burial deposits were submitted, in a letter dated August 4, 1925, kindly informed me as follows:
'The specimens (they are all the same) are undoubtedly fragments of the twigs of Ephedra, a low-growing shrub with slender green branches devoid of leaves except for a small membranous sheath at the nodes. It is abundant in the drier regions of the Himalayas and Tibet, and generally in Central and Western Asia.'
