

CONTENTS.

INDIAN, GREEK, ROMAN AND MOHAMMEDAN GEOGRAPHERS

	Page
CHAPTER I. South-western Tibet in Indian antiquity . . . . .	3
» II. The Greeks and Romans . . . . .	22
» III. Ptolemy . . . . .	34
» IV. The Arabian geographers . . . . .	42
» V. Later Mohammedan writers . . . . .	68

CHINESE AND TIBETAN GEOGRAPHERS

CHAPTER VI. Chinese works on the hydrography of South-western Tibet . . . . .	79
» VII. Wei-tsang-t'u-chih . . . . .	89
» VIII. The Chinese geographers on the source of the Brahmaputra . . . . .	92
» IX. The northern tributaries to the Tsangpo . . . . .	96
» X. The source of the Brahmaputra on the Ta-ch'ing map . . . . .	100
» XI. Some descriptions of the Manasarovar and its surroundings . . . . .	108
» XII. The Shui-tao-ti-kang on the source of the Brahmaputra and the Satlej . . . . .	114
» XIII. Manasarovar and surrounding regions in Tibetan works . . . . .	124

EARLY EUROPEAN KNOWLEDGE OF TIBET

CHAPTER XIV. Europe's knowledge of Tibet in the middle ages . . . . .	133
» XV. Friar Odoric. — Sir John Mandeville . . . . .	140
» XVI. East Indian travellers in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries . . . . .	144
» XVII. When did the name Manasarovar become known to Europe? . . . . .	154
» XVIII. Benedict Goës and Antonio de Andrade . . . . .	157