

As Camp CCLVII was pitched just at the foot of this range, the latter concealed everything behind us, and only half a panorama, 359A and B, Tab. 64, could be sketched. It shows a Transhimalayan peak to the N. 42° W., being to the right of the general direction of the main valley. To the right of this peak, are the shoulders and ramifications of the Transhimalaya, all of moderate size, and as usual modelled by erosion and weathering. To the N. 68° E., is the narrow transverse valley by which the Singi-kamba pierces the system, and then crosses the whole plain to the junction. To the S. 50° E., a last top which we had passed on our way from Gartok, is visible.
