

is possible. So, of the whole floor of a valley, perhaps from one-eighth to one-sixth is all that would be cultivated. The valley bottoms form but a small proportion of the whole country, for they are generally mere gorges, and seldom widen out to a breadth of a mile. It may be imagined, therefore, that Chitral is not a rich or productive country.