

tents were so placed that they might easily have been washed away by a deluge, but the rain was not so formidable on this occasion.

In the evening the jackals started their mocking serenade, but the dogs, which had now not heard these children of the wilderness for some time, were annoyed and drove them away.