

Tirhút, a town, Lat. 26°, Long. 85°, and district, in Bengál ترهت Hind.

"The (country) enclosed by rivers." From the Sanskrit Tīrā-bhukti (the country with) river-limits, this province being bordered on three sides by rivers, viz., by the Gāṇ-dāk, the Ganges, and the Kōsi, with the Himālaya-tarāi to the north.

Tīsta, or Tīšta, properly Trisrōtas, a river in Sikkim and Bengál, Lat. 25°, Long. 88° तिष्ठा properly त्रिस्रोतस् Sanskr.

"The river with three branches." From tri, three, and srotas, river. Wilford, As. Res., Vol. XIV., p. 420.

Tīsum, in Gnári Khórsum, Lat. 31°, Long. 80° . . . བཅི་གསུམ bsti-gsum. Tib.

"Three halts." Bsti, halt; gsum, three.

The natives refer it to its being a halting-place where three roads meet. Compare Súm-do.

Tonagúdi, on Ramiser Island, near Ceylon, Lat. 9°, Long. 79° Tamul.

"Water-temple." Tóna, water; gúdi, temple. M'Kenzie, As. Res., Vol. VI., p. 428.

Trankebár, in the Karnátik, Lat. 11°, Long. 80° Sanskr.

"The place of waves." We find this interpretation in Stein's "Handbuch der Geogr.," Vol. II., p. 585, which can be connected with the Sanskrit tarānga, the wave.

Trichinapállí, or Trichinópolis, in the Karnátik, Lat. 10°,

Long. 78° Sanskr. Tam.

"The town of the three-headed (god)." Tri, three; síras, the head. This is a surname of Kuvéra, the god of wealth; pállí is the ordinary Tāmūl word for village. This name undergoes many minor variations of its original form, such as: Trissirapállí, Tiri-chirapállí, Tirichirapúram, &c.; the present form of the word is probably an arbitrary European alteration.

Tríjugi (or Tríyugi) Naráin, in Gārkvál, Lat. 30°, Long. 78° त्रियुगिनारायण Sanskr.

"Narāyan existing during three ages." This epithet of Víshnu is here applied to a village.

Trikonomállí Sanskr. Tamul.

"The three-topped mountain." The modes of spelling this name are very various, e. g. Trikonamallí, Tirukkanamalái, Tirukkunarramalái, Tirikonamalái, &c.

Trisúl, a peak in Kāmáon, Lat. 30°, Long. 79° . ترشول properly ترشول Hind., त्रिशूल Sanskr.

"Trident" (an emblem of Mahadéva).

Trivéni, in Hindostán, Lat. 25°, Long. 81° त्रिवेणी Hind., त्रिवेणी Sanskr.

"(Confluence of) three rivers." Especially applied to the confluence of the Ganges and Jámna at Allahabád, joined, it is thought, by the Sarasvati under ground.