- L.B. iv. ii. 0013. Fr. of woollen carpet in blue and red. The construction resembles that of the ordinary Indian darri. The warp is a tightly twisted hemp string, and the weave 'satin'. The colours do not run right across the fabric, but are inwoven with each other at their junctions, where they are cut off. The new feature in this specimen is the addition of tufts at the back in rows about fifteen picks apart, and interlocking with each other laterally, each tuft being held in by two loops of the warp, three 'ends' apart, thus bridging the intermediate three 'ends'; while each of the engaging 'ends' holds the contiguous extremities of two tufts. The tufts are of four strands c. 1" in length when tied; allowing $\frac{3}{4}$ " for the knotting, they would be pieces $2\frac{3}{4}$ " in length. Care is taken not to engage the same warp thread more than once in each four rows of tufts, and thereby all the warp threads are taken up equally and the fabric is not distorted. The use of these tufts has been suggested under L.A. vi. ii. 0046.
